ABOUT EAT2018

The Education and Technology Research Training Network and Summer School (EAT 2018 ) aims to explore and enhance career opportunities for doctoral and postdoctoral researchers in the interdisciplinary field of research in Educational Science, Information Technology, and Digital Culture. Particular attention will be given to exploring the value of developing transferable digital skills and intercultural skills, as well as of committing to international mobility.

Background: The EAT doctoral network is the result of previous efforts (deployed since 2007 and involving more than 300 participants) to internationalise and promote doctoral research across partners with the aim of improving the scientific quality, international scientific competitiveness of candidates, and improve the professional visibility of young researchers during and after their PhD.

Target groups: In 2018, PhD researchers, more than ever, face serious challenges when considering a postdoctoral career. The most crucial challenges are (1) to find suitable multidisciplinary support and theoretical access to the pursued doctoral subject, (2) to acquire and capitalise on transferrable skills and intercultural skills, (3) to integrate efficient research mobility and internationalisation as part of doctoral and postdoctoral training, and (4) to achieve high competitiveness for successfully obtaining financial and institutional support for postdoctoral research in Europe and elsewhere, e.g., obtaining Marie Curie grants or being successfully included in ERC grants.

Rationale: In universities, prevailing expectations of successfully being awarded externally funded projects tend to oversee the strong need for personnel development of young doctoral researchers and, as well, for early planning of the transition phase from doctoral to postdoctoral research. Postdoctoral researchers are also facing the same kind of challenges.

Novel approaches: The EAT European doctoral network has been predominantly focusing in previous years on individual process support in PhD project achievement and networking. EAT2018 will capitalise on previous successes in this area to develop fresh approaches to increasing the qualification of doctoral candidates, as well as offering direct support to participants in their concrete research situation and career planning.

Activities: Five « Breakfast Talks » Sessions will pool together experts in the field of research career development and junior researchers. Regular afternoon sessions will address two interrelated strands: (1) project-specific peer group interaction between junior and senior researchers. Each doctoral and postdoctoral participant will present his/her current project, focusing on the conceptual framework, workflow and project progress; (2) "myself"-oriented career interaction, focusing on the participants' career plans, e.g., mapping opportunities, resources and obstacles. Each dimension will involve briefing and debriefing on a peer-basis by co-participants. Plenary sessions will be devoted to discussing common issues and sharing findings. Informal events will be organised to foster social interaction between participants.

Academic recognition: PhD students who have participated in the full programme will be awarded 5 EC TS.

Flights and flight prices

Several companies fly to Bergen Norwegian, KLM Air France, SAS, Wizzair, Air Baltic and more. There is a direct connection with Air France from Paris. Unfortunately, the direct flight Bergen-Frankfurt by Lufthansa is no longer operative. Air France has a new direct flight from Paris CDG to Bergen.

Direct flights from and to Bergen can be found at <https://avinor.no/en/airport/bergen-airport#directflights>

Flights to Bergen are usually very crowded (especially the Amsterdam-Bergen leg), so early bookings are imperative.
