

DGVN Lunchtalk with Dr. Sylvia Maus, LL.M.

UN Peace Operations and Human Rights

The protection of human rights is considered one of the cornerstones of lasting peace. Human rights mainstreaming forms an important part of the UN's flagship activity: the peace operations. But do UN peacekeepers actually have to respect and protect human rights? On what legal basis and to what extent? And what happens when they fail at protecting even the most basic rights of the people to whose rescue they have been deployed, as has happened with devastating consequences, like in Haiti and elsewhere?

Dr Sylvia Maus, scientific coordinator at the UNESCO Chair in International Relations at TU Dresden, will give an account of the current debate on the issue and present some selected case studies which she has analysed for her book UN Peace Operations and Human Rights: Normativity and Compliance.
