Beschreibung/ Ziele der Veranstaltung	This course will examine the current debates regarding liberalism and conservatism in America. It will explore these political concepts in the context of the present political debates, especially those emerging around 2012 presidential elections. While in the current American political debate the terms liberalism and conservatism are used freely, their meaning is ambiguous, seemingly dividing America. Using political and philosophical texts, excerpts from political debates, documentaries and news clips, students will become familiar with these two concepts and their relevance to topics such as immigration, economy, constitutionalism and civil liberties.
