

“The 2022 Midterm Elections”

—a Lecture and Discussion with Prof. Dr. David Goldfield, University of North Carolina, Charlotte

The event is open to the public and no registration is required.

Date and Time: Tuesday, May 24, 2022 from 16:40 to 18:10

Location: Room 301; Hörsaalzentrum (HSZ/0301/U); Bergstraße 64; 01069 Dresden

For any questions please email them to Michael Moser (a contact within American Studies at TU Dresden) at michael_louis.moser@tu-dresden.de

A total of 469 seats in the U.S. Congress (34 Senate seats and all 435 House seats) are up for election on November 8, 2022. The midterm elections will decide who controls the House and Senate in the second half of President Biden’s term. Several high-profile gubernatorial races in key battleground states will also be decided. Midterms often serve as a referendum on the administration in power while setting the table for the next presidential elections.

Dr. Goldfield will review the Biden administration’s legislative achievements, discuss the history-making nomination of the first female African-American candidate to the Supreme Court and comment on factors such as inflation, the pandemic, and the conflict with Russia and developments in the Democratic and Republican party.

The event is sponsored by the U.S. Consulate General Leipzig and organized and supported by the American Studies team at TU Dresden.

